Dear Gus:

I was very much impressed by the manner in which the briefing went off on March 21st. As a rule, such briefings are not initially too productive. In this instance, however, I feel that a very great deal of beneficial information was exchanged, and both our people and yours seemed to begin thinking along the same lines almost as soon as they got together. It was quite obvious that each side was stimulating the other from the start.

We will follow up directly with your people on some of the points that were raised. This will be done through [redacted] so as to avoid confusion.

All of us appreciate the time and trouble that your panel of experts devoted to us. I would be grateful if you would thank all of them who came to Washington for the meeting. In the interests of security I am not writing to them individually although I would like to make certain that they know how much we enjoyed meeting with them. I particularly want to thank you for having set up the meeting and for having spent the entire day with us.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

25X1
